

10/31/2020 – PRESS RELEASE - For Immediate Release

An Epik Update on Gross Malfeasance and Corruption in America

The Seattle-based registrar Epik has provided detailed statements and collaborating evidence to address PayPal's recent allegations of money laundering and tax evasion, as well as key materials debunking the extensive libel and direct attacks that PayPal and Mashable believed were necessary, as a tool to cover up the truth of how key executives and monopolies target enterprises for service reduction.

Material Points

- Call for resignation of PayPal CEO Dan Schulman for gross negligence, recent PayPal libel and slander, theft and seizure of monies, weaponized harassment of customers and accounts to inflict organizational disruption, and the mismanagement of PayPal as a political targeting tool to cause suffering and hardship based on Schulman's personal beliefs and private views.
- Identifies Mashable, Matt Binder, and PayPal as originating sources, for over 200 documented articles and media cases directly citing manufactured libel and slander since October 23rd.

- A small collection of the vast letters and correspondence issued from Epik, that offer the clearest possible display of the company's intolerance and views towards racism, hate, discrimination, and the incitement or encouragement of violence upon others. While registrars maintaining technical management of domain names should not administratively have the expected authority or empowerment to make critical decisions for the world regarding what constitutes responsible free speech, they nevertheless have the capacity to decide who they extend critical services and content protection to.
